The first lesson in this unit on short vowels will focus on the short A sound, which is located in the middle of words such as cat, fan, mask and so on. It also begins with words such as apple and medium. I have created six different lessons that can be used to teach this important short vowel sound for your child. We encourage you to use these worksheets at home as part of your home school curriculum or use them in the classroom as part of your lesson plan or to strengthen the skills your class is working on. Thank you for visiting! I presented a short A sound in several different ways. The first sheet has different objects on it. Go through items with your child and name them all. If the word uses a short vowel sound for a, then circle the element. In the second document there are nine different boxes. Each field has a photo with a line to save below it. As in the first document, go through the items and name them your child. For each image that uses vowel sound, type the letter a on the line below it. There are several different ways to use this worksheet. You can full word, not just the letter a. You can also turn this into a and let your students write down all the words under each photo and then highlight the letter and words that use a short sound with a crayel or marker. Make it fun! The third print is on it three rows. Each line has an image with a line to write below it and four words next to it. Name the item in each image, and then circle the word next to it. Finally, write the correct word on the line below the photo. The fourth sheet has three rows on it. Each row has three different pictures on it. Go through items with your child and name them. If the item uses the correct vowel sound, the color in the object. The following document has a box at the top with four words. This is the word bank. Below are four separate fields with a word in them. Using the word bank, write a word that rhymes inside the box. Under the boxes there are two lines for writing. The first line is missing a word. Follow the words and then write a word from the bank that best complements the sentence. Then use the line at the bottom to create the original sentence using a word other than the bank. The Web Words sheet is a fun activity that your child can use to invent words using a short vowel. In each web section, write a word that uses short sound. There are ten sections of the network, so your child needs to come up with ten different words. If you need help, you can see short lists of vowel words I created at the bottom of this page. For more challenges, invite your students to write words in empty spaces between ribbons. There are about five places for each section of the network. Sue them to come up with as many words as possible! More short sound sheets and letters can be found on these pages: Sheets › Short Vowels › Short and This post contains affiliate links. It's getting better and better at resoning with CVC's words thanks to our practical actions and games. Here are some free printables you can get right on this site! After all this practice, I knew that my Five was ready to review/evaluate with a worksheet package. The package contains nine worksheets, not to make all of them, but to select the ones that work for your students. We started with this match page. After we did the business I realized that it would be better to have the words in the first column so that I had to read them before finding the pictures, not vice versa. (Two columns are switched to download.) I discovered that novice readers may be exhausted by many writing activities, so I kept this to a minimum in the package. In the example above, my Five just had to name each photo and glue it under the correct word name. read simple sentences and matched Here he read every word and matched the photos. This action has the same idea, but every word starts with a mixture or digraph. This was the last thing we did today. He colored the letters of each word and wrote the words on the line. Writing every word was quite tiring for him (he had not yet started kindergarten), so it was time to do after this sheet. I told him that after he had done some worksheets, he could write on my computer. Soon he was very busy typing numbers 1-100, which is one of his favorite things to do. ☺ We hope you can use some pages in this package!
